TEMPERANCE MASS MEETING. Strong Speeches of the Ardeat Advocates in the Cause. Union Chapel, on Twentieth atreet, was well filled last evening with people who came out to hear the clear propositions, the logical arguments, the vulcan plows of Wm. F. Switzler, Good Templar, and that other elequent and forceful advocate of the gospel of temperance, as taught in the Good Templar lodge and ritual, Past Grand Chief C. N. Whitney. Brother Money, of Star of Hope Lodge, of committee on public meetings, had secured the place, and good delegations from his lodge and from Star of Hope Temple were present. The meeting was opened by the Rev. Mr. Chapman, Mr. Smith leading in prayer, and Dr. Charles Ladson conducting the song service. The pastor announced that Col. Switzler had been called out of the city and introduced Brother Bradley, calef officer of the Sons of Temperance, who would speak until the arrival of Mr. Whitney.

Mr. Bradley addressed himself to the prohibition phase of the question, prefacing with a confession of the difficulty of tilling the place of another; that he could not borrow Col. Switzler's eloquence, though the might borrow his thoughts. The object of the Good Templars in opening these mass meetings he declared to be to sitr up the minds of the people and urge them to do their duty in the matter of petitions to Congress for a prohibitory law. Certain congressmen had told him they could not vote for prohibition because they did not think the people of Washington wanted it. He was sure if the women were counted as people a majority did desire it. The tirest Law Giver, he said, did not wait until the people were prepared for them before promulgating the ten commandments. The speaker held the attention of his hearers closely for an hour, and then Mr. Ashley was introduced for a ten minutes' address, to give way if Mr. Whitney arrived in the meantime. At the conclusion of an interesting twenty-minute speech a vole was taken upon Mr. Ashley's suggestion to test the strength of prohibition sentiment in the audience. It was an aftimative vote and unanimous.

Grand Chief John R. Mahoney delivered a strong, practical temperance address be Wm. F. Switzler, Good Templar, and that other elequent and forceful advocate of the affirmative vote and unanimous.

PUNDITA RAMABAI

She Who is so Nobly Aiding Her Sex

Among the noted women who will speak at the Wom n's Jubilee, to be held in this city, in March next, perhaps one of the most interesting is Pundita Ramabal Sarasvati, of India, more familiarly known as the Pundita Ramabat.

Pundita Ramabat.

When one has heard something of the learning, the courage, the single-heartedness of Ramabat, and is then brought face to face with this little woman whom many American sisters have already learned to love, one is surprised to find her in figure almost a child, with a young face, large, frank, widely-opened eyes, and a manner which charms at once by its unaffected simplicity.

Born of parents who had outgrown the Born of parents who had outgrown the narrow riews of what a woman ought to know, which preval all over India, instructed while yet a child in Sanskrit by her devoted mother, married at 10 to an educated man canable of appreciating her worth, whowed after only infecten months of happy wedded life, Ramabai has consecrated her life and abilities to the work of helping the women of India out of darkness into the light of education and freedom.

At Calcutta, before her marriage, the learned young Sanskrit scholar was called before the assembled pundits and examined. They conferred upon her the title of Sarssyati, which means "Minerva," From 1884 to 1886 the pundits occupied a position as lecturer on Sanskrit in the Ladies' College at Cheltenham, England, while her leisure was devoted to the study of mathematics, science, and English literature. She legue at Cheltenham, England, while her leisure was devoted to the study of mathematics, science, and English literature. She comes to the women of America to tell the story of her Hindu sisters, and to ask for help to enable these Hindu women to help themselves.

In the concluding chapter of her very interesting book, "The High-Caste Hindu Woman," she says: "After many years of careful observation and thought I have come to the conclusion that the chief needs of high-caste Hindu women are—first, self-reliance: second, education; third, native women teachers!" and she proceeds to set forth her plan for helping them in a manner which inspires one with fatth both in her own sincere devotion to the work and in her ability as a woman of business.

A woman finely educated as Ramabai is, interested in women, able to express herself with a simple elegance of diction which is likely elegance of the hampered and hindered woman-bood of India—such a woman will add interest and value to the sessions of the International Council of Women.

Out a Sell. Not many rights since a belated Repun-LICAN reporter was trudging out Four-teenth at set on his homeward journey There was a faraway look in his eye and his thoughts wandered for the time from earthly things; when suddenly a burly form loomed up majestically in the gloom.

"Hist," whispered the "form," which the reporter recognized as that of Officer of an outside precinct: "did you hear a noise down the street?"
"No." This was uttered anxiously by the newspaper man, who had by this time become arcused to the seriousness of the situation.

come arcused to the seriousness of the situation. "Listen," said the officer, "there, that's it," and as he spoke a faint sound not unlike a long drawn out cry of distress sighed on the cold, crisp air.
"Follow me and we'll see what this is." The reporter did so with alacrity, and he soon found himself bounding over the frosty concrete at a rapid pace. Not a word was spoken until the open space near Seventeetth and Streets was reached, when a sound broke clearly upon the morning air that completely dumbfounded the officer and his comrade. A halt was called. The sound came again.

and his comrade. A hait was cated. The sound came again.

"Ay tee fo!"

"I thought so," said the officer, at the same time blowing a blast from his whistle.

"Hello! There's Smith, of the —th district. Let's know something about it."

"Why, it's them carriage fellows at the Chinese legation ball," muttered Smith in a discontent force.

Chinese regation only, muttered smith in a disgusted tene.

Weary and crestfallen the officer and Kapenhican man retraced their steps, mumbling something that sounded very much like "sold."
